

DAY 1: AM

HARRY POTTER WORLD FACES A CRISIS

By: Ilar Volovic Rosin

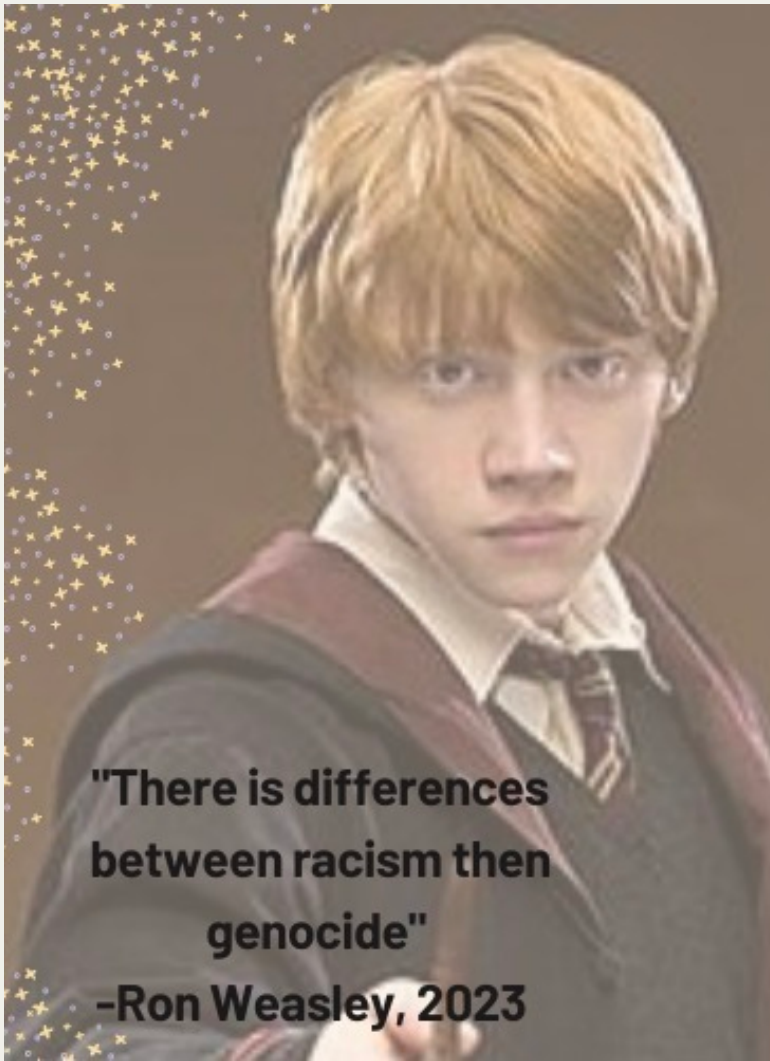

Upon stepping into the committee, heated arguments and different people stating their stance and beliefs on the topic of racism against muggles. Nevil Longbottom, whose both parents were tortured into insanity by Death Eaters, wants to start a war against racism by: Adding to the Hogwarts school curriculum studies about muggles and the muggle world as well as capturing magical beings who harm others (muggles included). Most of the people in the committee I have heard have had a similar stance on the situation; many agree that adding to the school curriculum muggle studies...

...will help people from the wizarding world, who have limited knowledge on muggles and their world in general, understand them much better and view them as equal people, and not as worse or less worthy. However, Severus Snape seems to have a different opinion regarding this topic. He believes that muggles and wizards should not be treated equally as they are not at all equal, a further interview I will conduct will hopefully reveal the ideology behind his harsh opinions.

THE CRISIS HQ - THE BACKROOMS

By: Tess Welbes

An eerie silence fills the Crisis Headquarters as they anxiously wait for the hoard of notes to arrive. While the crisis headquarters are not a committee, they decide the fate of four committees - 1947 Historical, Star Wars, Harry Potter, and the Russian Cabinet. Lots of pressure lies on their shoulders but they are managing. For now.

Rotem, for example, is a long-time MUN delegate but is currently facilitating her first backroom. Being the backroom manager for the Harry Potter committee, she knows lots of information about Harry Potter already. “I read all the Harry Potter books from 8-10, and it’s fun trying to remember everything about the books to be able to understand all the directives.” Most of the managers in the HQ are tirelessly working on processing the directives for their given committees. The Press Room sends lots of luck to the Crisis backrooms.
